THE IMPERIAL FRENCH PORCUPINE. "Walk up, walk up, gentlemen and ladies, into the Menagerie of Modern Europe. Here you will behold that wonderful animal so correctly described by the celebrated poet Shakespeare, under the name of the French Porcupine. Fretful according to some authors, was the original expression; whichever you please: you pays your money, and you takes your choice.

"This extraordinary creature is an animal of what the zoologists call the Napoleonic species; he is of a reserved and silent disposition; but is able on occasion to open his mouth and show his teeth. The remarkable specimen of natural history afore you is covered with quills, which may appear inconsistent when you consider the singular animosity he is said to display against the liberty of the Press. The quills exhibits a striking similar ity to swords and bagonets with artillery, rifles, carbines, and other firearms, by means of which, possessing the astonishing proper-ty of shooting missiles out of his self, the creature is enabled to annoy his hadversaries at a considerable distance. The French Por-cupine, by the sounds which he utters for to express his sentiments, is apparently desirous to get the credit of being of a peaceable disposition, which you will scarcely perhaps be inclined to allow, considering the formidable weapons with which this animal is armed. Though an inhabitant of France, his inclinations, by some accounts, prompts him to extend his range over Italy, and some suspects him of intention to carry his ravages into the Austrian dominions, whilst, according to others, he is disposed to be quiet, if so be as how you only let him alone. According to which I shall omit the usual operation of stirring him up with a long pole: which Master Walewsik is at liberty to perform if he pleases .-

EDWARD EVERETT.

Punch.

That a man of his years, whose physical energies are tasked by travel, and the toil of delivering a set oration so often as Mr. Everett is known to have repeated that on Washington,-one whose mental powers are taxed for the weekly production of an article meant for the eyes of hal' a million readers, that he should yet find time for the preparation of so admirable an essay on Franklin's early history,-is a remarkable instance of what great talents can accomplish. It is the fashion in certain quarters to deny Mr. Everett the possession of great natural abilities; to energy as he exhibits is a talent in itself that few possess; and let those who think his eloquence solely the result of study, attempt to elaborate one of those splendid flights for which he is distinguished let them endeavor to catch the subtle fancies, to embody the noble thoughts, to clothe the profound philosophy that he utters in language as fitting as melodious, as ornate and glowing as that of the orator, and they will perhaps acknowledge that some of the effects of his eloquence are not such as can be acquired .- N.
